

Due to the recent severe weather we have faced here in north and east Texas I would think that it would not matter to you where people get weather information from, as long as they get it and remain safe. I don't get local weather information from satellite radio, as the area I live in is a rural one, but I surely don't see why others, who live in more metropolitan areas, should not. Every thing else about satellite radio is great, this should be too.
